

Barry Hubler

GIMM350

September 15, 2019

Research Strategies

I generally start with Google to get me over to stack overflow when I get stuck. If that doesn't help very fast, sometimes I'll head over to youtube, but that's not too good, because I'm often left not understanding what that guy just did. I have access to a lot of cheap courses On Udemy, and if I have a lot of time on my hands I can sift through those to try to find something helpful, they generally explain if fairly well. Then there are these textbooks we have for this course. They have a lot of helpful information in them.